would work a little hardship on some players, it is true, but not much on the club owners, because the fans get disgusted with bad teams and quit attending games anyhow.

Better still, why not put the championship up at auction on April 15 and allow the club owners to bid for it? Or, if we want to add a little sporting interest, why not allow the managers to bid, one by one, for players in April. The highest bidder, of course, would get the winning team, but it would also test the judging it of managers, and it would do any with the deceit of the patrons of the game, who are led to believe that their teams have a chance to win until the rich clubs commence bidding for players.
